

Mamakis Georgios was born in Agios Nikolaos, Crete. He studied Pedagogy and Sociology at the University of Crete. He holds a Master's Degree in Education Sciences. His PhD studies are in the field of history and sociology of the educational institution. He was trained in Education Sciences at the School of Education of the University of Crete. He has been working since 1995 in Greek public education from various positions of responsibility (Deputy Director and Director of Primary School, Head of Environmental Education and School Activities, Head of Environmental Education Center, School Advisor of Primary Education, Director of Primary Education, Teaching Staff in Higher Education). His scientific and research interests fall within the broader field of history and sociology of education. It aims at the reconstruction and the gradual renewal of society through necessary changes in all sectors. In this light, it attributes a politically, economically and socially charged and ambitious role to education. In his view, Education for Sustainability is a place in which the vision of the Educator takes shape.